

LINGTON

PLANNING

The planning process in Lington is governed by the Lington Local Plan 2011-2026, which sets out the strategic planning framework for the town. The plan identifies key development areas and sets out the policies that will guide future development. The planning process is overseen by the Lington Town Council, which is responsible for making decisions on planning applications. The Council also works closely with the Scottish Planning Commission and the Scottish Government to ensure that the town's development is in line with national planning objectives. The planning process is a continuous one, and the Council regularly reviews the Local Plan to ensure that it remains up-to-date and effective. The Council also works with the community to ensure that the planning process is transparent and that the views of residents are taken into account. This approach ensures that the town's development is sustainable and meets the needs of the community. The Council also works with the private sector to promote investment and create jobs in the town. This approach has led to a significant increase in investment and job creation in Lington over the past few years. The Council is committed to continuing to work with the community and the private sector to ensure that Lington remains a vibrant and thriving town for the future.
