I'M JUST STRETCHING!

If your new mattress feels like it is sagging or losing pressure –

IT'S NOT LEAKING, IT'S JUST STRETCHING.

Simply reinflate the bed until it reaches your desired firmness.

It should maintain a consistent pressure and shape within 2-3 nights.

Please reference the instruction manual for the full product description and instructions for proper usage.

NOTE: When body weight is placed on this bed, it may make a noise. This is NOT a product defect and is NOT a sign of product damage.

AIR MATTRESS 101

With proper care, your new mattress will provide many nights of restful sleep! Keep these simple suggestions in mind...

USAGE

Air mattresses are intended to be temporary sleeping solutions, rather than traditional mattress replacements.

INFLATION

Over-inflating your air mattress or sitting on it during inflation can damage the bed and make it harder for the pump to fully inflate your mattress.

TEMPERATURE

Air mattresses are sensitive to temperatures below 59°F/15°C and need time to warm up before being unpacked, unfolded and inflated. The material may tear if any of these actions are attempted before the mattress has adjusted to room temperature.

PUNCTURE HAZARDS

It is not recommended to move your mattress after it is inflated. Moving your inflated air mattress could result in unexpected damage to the bed. To avoid puncturing your mattress, please inflate and use it away from objects with sharp edges.

CLEANING

Use a dry or dampened cloth and a neutral detergent, such as soap, baking soda or vinegar, and gently clean the surface. Then air dry or use a hair dryer (at least 19 in. away from the bed) to dry the mattress.
