

| QUESTION | | ANSWER |
|---|--|-------------------------------------|
| 1. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 2. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 3. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 4. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 5. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 6. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 7. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 8. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 9. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |
| 10. A patient with a long history of alcohol abuse is admitted to the hospital with a diagnosis of pancreatitis. The patient is in severe pain and is unable to eat. The nurse is planning to administer morphine to the patient. Which of the following is the most important nursing intervention to implement when administering morphine to this patient? | | Monitor for respiratory depression. |

